BEMORE CHILL

Be More Chill

Henry Wolski

Executive Editor

The off Broadway musical “Be More Chill” is ending its run on Sept. 30, before making its Broadway debut in February 2019. In the meantime, Sinclair’s theater department is bringing the relatively new musical to Sinclair College on Oct. 5-13.

The musical’s music and lyrics were composed by Joe Iconis and began its run off Broadway in 2015. Following the original run, the musical soared in popularity and due to fan support on social media it was brought back for another run that was completely sold out.

It is based off the 2004 book of the same name written by Ned Vizzini.

The story focuses on Jeremy, a social outcast who longs to be “cool” that joins the school play to get closer to his crush Christine. Later on the school bully, Rich, tells Jeremy about a pill called the “super quantum unit intel processor,” or “SQUIP.” It implants itself in the brain of the host and tells them how to act.

Rich tells Jeremy how the device made him popular and encourages him to get one. He talks it over with his best friend Michael and reassures him that they’ll always be friends. With his blessing, Jeremy buys a SQUIP for himself. From there, antics happen due to the hold the SQUIP has over Jeremy’s mind.

The Sinclair production of the musical brings together several talented personnel from Dayton and graduates from the college.

“Be More Chill” is directed by Chris Harmon, a prominent figure in the Dayton theater community.

Some of his previous accolades include contributing designs of productions to several local theaters, such as the Beavercreek Community Theatre, Dayton Playhouse and the Town Hall Theatre.

He has won 54 DayTony awards (which is a record according to the Dayton Daily News) and was the youngest member to be inducted into the Dayton Theatre Hall of Fame in 2013.

This is not his first time working at Sinclair, as in the past he has directed “Blood at the Root,” “The Toxic Avenger” and “The Wiz.” Harmon spoke about how this production differed from others he’s directed at Sinclair:

“It’s so new, and fresh and I’ve done other musicals here... and I think this one has a good social message and theme, but it’s really just a lot of fun and feels very contemporary,” Harmon said.

“Be More Chill” has many more musical numbers than an average production at Sinclair, and with that includes the need for choreography. Frequent Sinclair collaborator Rodney Veal is in charge of that aspect of the play.

Sinclair graduates involved in the production include Lighting Designer Marissa Childress (who also graduated from the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music) and Stage Manager Brian Morgan (a graduate of Ball State University as well).

Another point of interest is Sarah Parrott, the sound designer of the musical. All of the sound effects and voice clips are found or created from scratch by her. She also handles getting microphones on the actors and pit orchestra.

She is a second year Sinclair student that has participated in national competition, including the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival (KCACTF). She won an award of merit and a presenter award. Due to this, she has the rare privilege of being a student in the designer position. She’s very excited to show off her talents in one of Sinclair’s biggest productions of the year.

“I am very thankful to have gotten the opportunity to design not only plays here at Sinclair but a musical here as well,” Parrott said. “We don’t do a musical every year, so to have that opportunity... I am stoked.”

Along with those behind the scenes, the actors on the stage are excited and have much to say about the show.

Anthony Dell’Aria leads the cast as Jeremy, while Michael is played by Micah Koverman. Katelyn Pennington plays Christine, Rachel Charles plays Chloe and Jared Setser plays the SQUIP.

Setser spoke about the uniqueness of the music and a real world connection that can be made about the nature of the SQUIP:

“The music is interesting... it’s sort of like a rock musical, but it’s also a musical,” Setser said. “A big thing today that we have to ask ourselves about is A.I., and this is something that could happen in our future.”

Charles spoke about her personal feelings toward the musical:

“I love [“Be More Chill”] because I can relate, I feel like I was the Jeremy in my high school... everyone’s gonna be able to relate to this at some point,” Charles said. “It definitely hits on some real topics kids struggle with nowadays.”

Pennington spoke about the importance of the musical’s message to younger viewers:

“It’s a show that needs to be seen,” Pennington said. “It’s something that teenagers need to see because it talks a lot about a person’s identity during high school, which is already a big issue because people always find themselves questioning where they belong and where they fit in.”

“Be More Chill” also expands past the theatre department, as Sinclair recently started a book club, where the novel by Vizzini will be discussed. The library has physical and electronic copies of the book available to borrow.

There will be a discussion group on the novel Tuesday, Sept. 25 at 11 a.m. and 5:15 p.m. at the Blair Hall Lobby in building 2.

Tickets are $18 for adults and $15 for students and seniors. Performances are at 8 p.m. on Fridays and Saturdays, as well as a 2 p.m. show on Sunday, Oct. 7 and a Throwback Thursday event on Oct. 11 where all tickets cost $10.

Sinclair’s production of “Be More Chill” promises entertaining musical numbers and a fun, engaging story for some of the younger students in the college.

In a rare case, Daytonians have the opportunity to see a Broadway musical four months before it hits the big stage, and the cast and crew members encourage you to come out and see it.

Therapy Dogs At Sinclair

Sean Kahle
Staff Writer

College can be a stressful place for many. From assignment deadlines, exams and the never ending study cycle, many students try to find a way to escape the stress.

One of these ways involves man's best friend, puppies!

Many may have heard of trained therapy dogs in places like hospitals and senior centers, providing a source of relief and happiness to the residents.

Bringing this idea to a college campus seems to be a recent trend that has been welcomed by many. There are examples that have been all over the internet and news over the past few years.

Sinclair itself has held events like this called Puppies on Campus in the past, entirely free for all students.

These events normally take place around midterms and finals, when students tend to be stressed about their upcoming tests.

Interacting with dogs has actual studies supporting the fact that it is good for both mental and physical health, according to UCLA Health. The simple act of petting dogs lowers anxiety, provides a happy distraction from stressors, reduces loneliness and increases mental stimulation.

It also physically reduces blood pressure and slows breathing, which helps to reduce anxiety.

These events also help the dogs themselves, as many of them are in training to be therapy dogs. Being in public situations helps to teach the dogs how to behave and handle the general public.

According to National Geographic, dogs themselves like working as therapy dogs as well. Dogs are selected specifically to be service dogs based on their individual behavior.

Puppies on Campus is part of Sinclair Talks and is sponsored by the Health Sciences Career Community but the 4 Paws for Ability organization provides the service dogs for the event. The organization also provides service dogs to children with disabilities as well as veterans.

This organization helps to educate the public about service dogs in public places. Some of their primary goals according to their website include:

“Provide as many children as possible, within the scope of our ability to serve, and with disabilities falling under the definition of such in the Americans with Disability Act (1990) with access to a qualified service dog trained specifically for their needs, with no minimum age, and regardless of the severity of the disability.” as well as, “Increase public awareness of the laws regarding service animals and the value they provide their owners.”

These events help to create awareness to organizations like these, which helps to spread the idea to college campuses around the world.

So far, having events with service dogs on college campuses seems to be a useful way for students to relieve their stress around finals time.

Multiple medical studies show that service dogs are a valid benefit for mental health.

Both the students and the dogs can benefit, since the events provide an opportunity for the dogs to get used to being out in public interacting with people.

Sinclair's Puppies on Campus is a local opportunity to see this type of event for yourself.

What Do You Need to Know About Voting in Ohio?

are the criteria for eligibility:

- You must be a US citizen.
- You must be 18 years old or older before the election day.
- You must be a resident of the state of Ohio for 30 days prior to the election.
- You may not be eligible to vote if you have been convicted of 2 or more felony charges in the state of Ohio.

The following is a partial list of the candidates running for Governor and

Senate. A comprehensive list can be found on www.mcboe.org

Governor

- Democratic Party Candidate: Richard Cordray
- Green Party Candidate: Constance Gadell-Newton
- Libertarian Party Candidate: Travis M. Irvine
- Republican Party Candidate: Mike Dewine

U.S. Senate

- Democratic Party Candidate: Sherrod Brown
- Republican Party Candidate: Jim Renacci

What?

The midterm election is to elect officials in the House of Representatives, the Senate, Congress, State representatives and Governor of Ohio. The House of Representatives has 435 seats up for re-election and the Senate has 34 seats up for re-election.

When?

The general election occurs on Nov. 6 2018, but the registration deadline is Oct. 9, 2018.

Where?

If you aren't sure where to vote, you can go to the Ohio Secretary of State website, under "Election Day Voting" there is a link to click for each county. Once you click on the county you are registered in, you will have the ability to type in your address and your local polling station information will be provided.

Why should we vote? In a democracy, one of our most valuable rights is voting. By voting we are taking initiative in making our voices heard. According to an article from NPR, millennials (18-35 year olds) make up a large portion of eligible voters. However, only about half of millennials voted in the 2016 Presidential election, which means millennials are not accurately being represented in the elections.

How?

In order to vote, you must register in person, online or by mail.

In person, you can register at any public library, the deputy registrar of the Bureau of Motor vehicles, County Treasurer's office or the office of the Secretary of State.

To register, you will need an Ohio driver's license or Ohio identification card. You will have to provide, your name, date of birth and address as well as the last 4 digits of your social security number.

You can also register to vote online through www.olvr.sos.state.oh.us, this link will take you directly to the page to register.

You can cast your vote in several different ways: You can go to your local polling station or use an absentee ballot which will be sent through the mail. Ohio does not currently provide early voting options.

A Look at Sinclair's International Education Office

Cerridwyn Kuykendall
Managing Editor

Currently located on the third floor of building two, the Office of International Education works to help international students on campus, build connections between students and bring a little bit of cultural opportunities to Sinclair Community College.

There are a variety of ways that international education works to achieve these goals, one of which is study abroad. Sinclair's study abroad trips are short term and in 2019 will be going to six different places, Italy, the U.S. Mexican border, Ireland and Scotland, Canada and South Africa.

The trips offer students a unique opportunity to experience a different culture and a different way of life. Giancarlo Mariani, an international education specialist in the office, reflected on some of his, and others he knows, travel abroad experiences. He said that it really changes who you are.

While these trips do cost, there are several scholarships offered to help students be able to have these experiences. Mariani encourages interested students to always apply, as you never know what scholarships you could get.

The office of International Education is always willing to help students interested in the program. "Students can always just come by the International Education Office and we can talk to them about the specific programs and walk them through the application process." Said International Admissions Coordinator Alex Brauer.

Another way the office works to connect students is the international committee, who works to build relationships between domestic and international students through events hosted on campus.

Events such as hosting days where students can come to the Office of International Education and all come and watch the European soccer games together.

The international education office isn't solely for international students, while that is a big part of what they do they also want to help build relationships between the different students on campus.

Mariani and others at the office urge students to come in and meet someone different from them, learn about another culture and help introduce international students to their culture here as well.

Hurricane Florence Relief

Kelsey Fitzpatrick
Staff Writer

After Hurricane Florence blew through the Carolinas, behind her she left river-like flooding that may not recede for days. After the flooding recedes though, many will be left with no home to return to, some cities completely destroyed.

Emergency workers have been working constantly to rescue those left behind, as well as analyze what damage has occurred. Cities like Wilmington, North Carolina, were left stunned as flood waters came, leaving people stranded.

The states have put curfews into effect, and many people are not allowed to return to their homes. Many are left wondering if their home survived.

State authorities have been working day and night to rescue those still in the dangerous areas, many cut off from the outside world due to the high flood waters.

Thirty-two have been killed thus far, by the Hurricane Florence and her aftermath, though many state officials fear this will not be it, as flood water continues to move through the Carolinas.

The sky has been a deceiving part of the Relief equation, many residents making attempts to get out on their own. Scott Dean, leading a search and rescue team out of Miami is encouraging residents not to try to cross large bodies of water because it is what is causing many to become injured or killed.

Parts of Waccamaw River near Conway, have flooded over 15 feet as of Monday, Sept. 17. Officials believe it is likely that by Friday, Sept. 21, the river will break the previous record of 17.9 feet, set just two years ago after Hurricane Matthew.

Cajun Navy Relief and Rescue, a non-profit group of volunteers from all parts of the nation, came to help aid in hurricane relief efforts. A group of them working in Lumberton, were able to rescue 40 patients from Highland Acres Nursing and Rehabilitation Home.

After five hours of rescue work, all had been sent to hospitals nearby.

Pollution is a major concern for many of the state's areas, as garbage dumps, farms and other sources of pollution are swamped with flood waters, spreading pollution.

Ash dumps and hog farms are among the major concerns with area officials, though how they will respond is still in question, as waters have not yet begun to recede.

With the weather still somewhat of an issue in many parts of the East coast, Americans are left wondering when returning home is an option, and whether relief efforts will be needed outside the major coastal areas of the Carolinas.

With two tornados having touched down in Virginia and flooding across the coast, it may take months, if not years, for complete restoration.

If you want to help and can't visit the area, check out charities to donate to like Save the Children or The American Red Cross. Also, check out local churches and school groups to see if they may be sending aid to areas affected by Hurricane Florence.

A New Face, A New Life: Katie Stubblefield

Hayley Edwards
Reporter

On March 24 2014, Katie Stubblefield, 18, had a failed suicide attempt that would bring her not only pain but the loss of her entire face.

Due to circumstances beyond her control, Stubblefield would lock herself in the bathroom of her brother's home and shoot herself under the chin with her brother Robert's .308-caliber hunting rifle.

Robert found her instantly and recalled the memory, saying the first thing he noticed was that "her face was gone."

According to National Geographic, "The bullet was a pernicious thief. To get a measure of what it stole from Katie, hold your hands up to your face, palms out, your thumbs touching beneath your chin and your index fingers touching between your eyebrows. Your hands are framing the part of Katie's face she lost."

The report continues: "Gone were part of her forehead; her nose and sinuses; her mouth, except for the corners of her lips; and much of her mandible and maxilla, the bones that make up the jaws and front of the face. Her eyes remained, but they were askew and badly damaged."

Stubblefield was first operated on in Memphis, Tenn. and saved against all odds. The doctors ended up having to try grafting skin from her abdomen to help close the gaping wound, though unsuccessfully.

Stubblefield was a small girl and the doctors who first operated on her were worried they wouldn't have enough tissues to work with to reconstruct what was basically her entire face; Stubblefield was only 105 pounds.

Brian Gastman, the first clinic doctor to see Katie said in his 27 years of practice Stubblefield's injuries were "one of the worst face traumas he'd ever encountered. Beyond the wound to her face, she had traumatic brain injury from the bullet's concussive force to her frontal lobe, optic nerve, and pituitary gland."

It took a team of 15 specialists to save Stubblefield's life.

Over the course of many surgeries the doctors were able to stabilize Stubblefield and patched what was left of her face. Stubblefield had never seen this face, but she had come to know it by touch, she calls it "the second of her young life, Shrek." Throughout her trauma, Stubblefield kept a bright optimistic disposition.

Stubblefield was on a transplant waiting list for three years until a donor came along, Andrea Schneider, a 31-year-old woman and organ donor who had recently passed away. She was a match.

May 4, 2017 was the day Stubblefield was told she was set for a full transplant. At 7:30 a.m., 11 surgeons gathered in OR-20, as the donor was wheeled into OR-19. Sixteen hours into a transplant operation at the Cleveland Clinic in Ohio, surgeons finish the intricate task of removing the face from an organ donor.

National Geographic reports that "Katie will be the youngest person to receive a face transplant in the United States. Her transplant, the clinic's third and the 40th known in the world, will be one of the most extensive, making her a lifelong subject in the study of this still experimental surgery."

The surgery didn't come without its hiccups though, they did run into some complications. For example, the donor's face was larger than Stubblefield's and her scar tissue took up space. There wasn't enough room for all of the donor's muscles and vessels and the skin tone wasn't a match, which would cause the transplant to stand out.

"The surgeons conferred, some of them stopping to examine the 3D models that had been made from CT scans of the two heads," the National Geographic report states.

"A majority thought they should give Katie the donor's full face. It was clear that it would look a lot better. A few on the team argued that more tissue and skin might mean she would have to take higher doses of the strong anti rejection drugs she'd be on for the rest of her life."

It continues: "Worse, in the case of a rejection so acute that her face had to be removed, she wouldn't have enough tissue on her body for reconstructive surgery."

Stubblefield's parents were brought into the fold and eventually decided Katie would want the entire face so that's what the surgeons at the Cleveland Clinic went ahead with.

At 3 p.m., 31 hours after surgery on the donor started, the surgeons finished suturing the top layer of skin, attaching the entire face.

After the surgery was complete Stubblefield's family came into see her in the intensive care unit and were amazed at their daughter and little sister's third face in just over three years.

Her brother's first words were about the new feature Stubblefield acquired a small dimple on her chin "like Kirk Douglas."

After the many months of physical therapy and various revision surgeries are completed Stubblefield says she intends to pick up right where she left off starting with college.

Her next goal is to obtain a career in counseling. She says "So many people have helped me; now I want to help other people." She hopes to speak to teenagers about suicide and the value of life, but for now she is focused on her recovery.

NFL Overtime Rules Draw Criticism

Lindsey Elam
Reporter

The 2018 NFL season has been official for three weeks. In those two weeks there have been two ties, both of which involved teams that were in their own division.

The Pittsburgh Steelers and the Cleveland Browns of the AFC South tied in week one, 21-21 and the Green Bay Packers and Minnesota Vikings of the NFC North tied in week two, 29-29.

The tying of these games has not been received well by current and veteran players.

Former New England Patriot Tedy Bruschi took to Twitter saying “Two weeks in the NFL and two ties. Overtime rules need to change. Pro football should have a winner and a loser.”

When asked in a postgame press conference how it felt to have the game ending in a tie, current Green Bay Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers said it felt “close to an ‘L’” and “disappointing.”

In 2012 the NFL changed the overtime format for regular season games. Play was changed to keep teams from being able to win with a field goal on the first possession. With this change put into place a team is only able to win on first possession by scoring a touchdown.

If the opening team with possession isn't able to score a touchdown and opt to score a field goal the opposing team has a chance to score a field goal in order to rebuttal and keep the game alive or score a touchdown to win the game.

Futbol, or soccer as we say here in the United States, has the potential for regular season games to end in a tie embedded in its tradition. However, here in the U.S., ties haven't received the same approval, nor was it an established rule in the sport's founding.

One reason being because of the determination factor of the playoffs. With all four teams that have tied, being in their respective divisions, could have potential controversy in the league's playoff format not yet encountered by the league or its fans.

For example; let's say the Bears finish the regular season leading the NFC North - which guarantees them a playoff spot - and the Packers one game behind them with the tie on their record but with more divisional game wins. The controversy becomes “What if the Packers didn't tie?”

With a lot of talk recently about how NFL should once again revise their overtime rules, here are a few examples to alleviate a tie game altogether:

Keep playing the current overtime rules as they are, but if the game is still tied at the end of the first overtime period, the original sudden death rule will come into play, meaning the next team to score a touchdown or field goal wins the game.

Use college overtime rules, the first team to receive the ball is determined by coin toss and the ball starts on the defending teams' 25-yard line. Whichever team scores a touchdown first wins. If after two periods the game is still tied, teams have to go for a two-point conversion instead of kicking the point after touchdown.

These are a few of the most popular options currently being tossed around to eliminate tie games in the NFL. What are your thoughts?

Mac Miller's Dies at 26

Tiauna Horejsi
Reporter

Rapper Malcolm McCormick, known as Mac Miller, was found dead at his home in California on Sept. 7, 2018. There has been much talk about how Miller died. Right now, people are saying the cause of death is a drug overdose.

The rumor is that the police are still secretly investigating his case, feeling that drugs did not kill Miller. Miller was dead for hours in his home before emergency responders arrived, TMZ states.

Miller had thrown a party the night before his death, and a large number of people were still at his house in the morning.

TMZ reporters say that the first 9-1-1 call was around noon. It seems no one found Miller dead until noon when the 9-1-1 call was first made.

Most of the people that were at the party spent the night Thursday and no one had seen him alive since Thursday night. So the question was, had Miller been dead since Thursday and they just happened to find him Friday morning?

Ariana Grande, his ex-girlfriend, had stated that Miller had been using drugs and made a statement on Instagram saying she wished she could have made the pain go away. A lot of people are blaming her for his death because he died a few months after she broke up with him.

Grande later ended up in the hospital for having an anxiety attack due to her getting cyber bullied and blamed for Miller's death.

Miller started his music career in 2007 with his first KIDS mixtape hit in 2010, but he had been rapping since the age of 14. His career really started after landing a record deal with Rostrum Records and he then released his first album “Blue Slide Park” on Nov. 8, 2011.

Miller was originally known as EZ mac when his 2007 mixtape “My Mackin Aint Easy” first released. “Blue Slide Park” was number one on the U.S Billboard 200 chart, making this album the first independently distributed debut album to accomplish this since 1995.

Miller then started performing in songs with bigger rappers like Juicy J, Lil Wayne, Kendrick Lamar and Cam'ron. Miller also appeared in “Scary Movie 5” with Snoop Dog. Miller then went on to sign a record deal with Warner Bros Records and dropping his deal with Rostrum Records.

He reached additional critical acclaim with the albums “GO:OD AM,”

“The Divine Feminine” and his latest project that released this past August, “Swimming.” He released 12 mixtapes and five studio albums in his 11 year career.

Miller seemed to be widely known and his death at 26 shocked a lot of people. Seven of his albums have climbed back into the Billboard top 200 following his death. Miler will be truly missed and not forgotten.

Marvel's Spider-Man Review

Youtube

Henry Wolski
Executive Editor

After much anticipation, “Marvel’s Spider-Man” was released Sept. 7 exclusively on the PlayStation 4.

It was developed by Insomniac Games, the team responsible for the original PlayStation 1 “Spyro the Dragon” trilogy and the “Ratchet and Clank” games, among others.

The game has had a long development cycle in an effort to make it have the best quality of any game based on the webslinger that came before it. It’s an open world game, taking a similar approach to the much loved “Spider-Man 2” from 2004.

So how does it stack up? First and foremost let’s talk about the story. There will not be any spoilers here.

Insomniac has stated that the story takes place in their own Spider-Man universe that doesn’t have any ties to another movie, TV series or game. With that freedom they have cherry picked different aspects from the comics and blended them together to create a really unique take on the webhead.

Peter Parker is 23 and has eight years of being Spidey under his belt. He’s already graduated college, worked at and quit the Daily Bugle, entered in and out of a relationship with Mary Jane Watson and is seeking out a career that will make a real difference in the world.

This is a big change from what we’re used to, since almost every incarnation of Parker in the last 10-20 years has been him as a high school student and we have to get through his origin story and his romantic struggles with Mary Jane.

He’s also already defeated many of his biggest enemies and put them in jail. Scattered throughout the city are 55 backpacks that fill in some of the gaps of the last eight years, usually containing pieces of a villain’s costume or an artifact Parker used to beat them, along with his thoughts on them. It’s a great incentive to explore the city and helps build the lore of this universe. As a huge Spider-fan I found these to be awesome.

The first mission of the game has you fight Kingpin and arrest him. It’s a great way to start off the action right off the bat while serving as a tutorial.

Kingpin’s arrest sets off a chain reaction where every crime group tries to take his position as the biggest dog in the yard.

From that point Peter has to battle a new gang called the Demons, and try to figure out what their motives are and who their leader is. Along the way he balances interactions with Mary Jane, Aunt May and working for Dr. Otto Octavius.

It’s a story that really manages to capture the tug of war Peter is trapped in. His obligations to those he loves often have to take a backseat to help citizens in need.

As it goes on, the story twists and turns until reaching a huge climax toward the end. The stories of Peter, MJ, Aunt May and Miles Morales all intersect with each other to create an emotional grand finale.

Overall, the story is great, as it takes a lot of risks. It is full of emotional gut punches and awe-inspiring set pieces. However I did have a few issues with it.

For one, the middle section of the game can drag a bit, as you start to switch characters and play through mandatory stealth sections (which I hate). The boss battles and big spectacles are also unevenly spread out, which makes the pacing of the game feel off.

Another issue is that some of the big twists that come are pretty predictable if you know anything about Spider-Man (it doesn’t help that Insomniac spoiled who Mr. Negative was months before release). Yet predictable doesn’t mean bad, as all the twists are executed perfectly.

The other main element of the game is the mechanics of how it plays. You primarily do two things in this game: traverse the city by swinging around and fight bad guys.

The swinging is fantastic, as it takes the model created for “Spider-Man 2” and perfects it. You will swing off of buildings and can see your web attached to it, but you can also use the trigger buttons to zip to points on buildings and jump off them at high speeds.

It’s all about momentum and it’s easy to keep it going. Traveling through the city is a blast and never feels like a chore due to how effortless and fun the swinging is.

The combat is great as well. It also builds on the mechanics started in “Spider-Man 2” as you attack enemies and dodge their movements to fill a focus bar.

In addition, your webs manage to trap enemies and leave them open to being thrown around or will stick them to the ground, to cars or to walls. Spidey also has a wide variety of gadgets at his disposal, like a drone that shoots enemies, a web that electrocutes them and a web bomb that traps all the bad guys in an area.

It’s a very deep combat system that feels incredibly satisfying to use, and this is only made better by the suits in the game.

There are 28 in total that can be unlocked and most of them carry a special ability. They can make you bulletproof for a few seconds, create a decoy, unleash a sonic wave that knocks out enemies or one that makes you invisible.

You can also unlock mods to the suit that increase health, reduce damage or give you advantages in combat over time, and you can use three of them at once. The level of customization is impressive for a third person action game.

More impressive is all the activities you can do in the city. This includes tracking down the movements of Black Cat, beating races and combat challenges for the Taskmaster, solving random crimes throughout the city, taking out safehouses of the many factions in the game or even taking pictures of landmarks through the city.

It’s a lot of stuff to do the increase the playtime, and they all serve an in story purpose as well as give you tokens to buy new suits and combat abilities. For the most part, everything you do in the beautiful open world of New York will benefit you.

So in the end, how does the whole package stack up? Well, it’s definitely the best Spider-Man game ever made, and feels like a labor of love toward the character and his fans.

The open world is massive and a lot of fun to explore. The story is fantastic and crafts its own universe by using the best elements from several different incarnations of the webslinger. And the gameplay is easy to pick up and rewarding to master.

This definitely sits as my favorite game of the year so far and is a worthwhile purchase for anyone that enjoys the wall-crawler, or just a good superhero game/story. It lives up to the hype and then some.

Back in the 90s, he was in a very famous TV show. And as of Sept. 14, 2018, Netflix original series “Bojack Horseman” has returned to the service for a fifth season.

The show premiered in Aug. 2014 on the streaming service and was created by Raphael Bob-Waksberg. Cartoonist Lisa Hanawalt worked with Bob-Waksberg to craft the design of the show.

The story follows the titular character, an actor in his 50s whose stardom peaked after starring in a popular 90s sitcom “Horsin’ Around,” a spoof of shows like “Full House.”

However, since the end of that show, he became jaded and depressed at the Hollywood cycle and engages in self destructive behavior regularly.

Youtube

Some examples include excessive drinking and drug use, lashing out at anyone who shows affection for him and running away from his problems. The show follows his journey of trying to better himself and mostly falling flat on his face. Bojack is played by Will Arnett.

Other characters include Todd, a slacker in his 20s that lives in Bojack’s house and gets himself into crazy antics. He’s voiced by Aaron Paul.

Diane is a Vietnamese-American writer who is a third-wave feminist trusted to ghostwrite Bojack’s memoirs. She holds the world to a high standard and isn’t afraid to call out injustice, even when it’s being perpetrated by her boyfriend Mr. Peanutbutter. She’s played by Allison Brie.

Mr. Peanutbutter is a dog-actor that starred in “Mr. Peanutbutter’s House,” a show inspired by “Horsin’ Around” (or it completely stole the premise of “Horsin’ Around,” according to Bojack)

He’s achieved a level of fame similar to Bojack but is beloved by people due to his carefree, positive outlook. He annoys Bojack immensely, but is either oblivious to it or doesn’t care. He becomes intertwined with the antics of the rest of the cast, mainly Todd and Diane. He is voiced by Paul F. Tompkins.

Rounding out the main cast is Princess Carolyn, a pink cat who works as a talent agent and is an on again, off again girlfriend of Bojack. She’s a workaholic that has several personal struggles, including trying to start a family. She’s played by Amy Sedaris.

The show’s world is unique, as it is full of anthropomorphic animals that dress like humans and have human features, but also live alongside humans. This allows the show plenty of opportunities to make jokes about the animals using their natural instincts and a number of sight gags and wordplay in the background.

The setting of the show is in a fictional Los Angeles, in “Hollywood.” The setting allows the creators to mock and satirize many current events going on in the world of entertainment today.

Some of these issues include the confusing nature of mainstream TV shows, sexual assault in the workplace, the way the media manipulates the public into thinking via celebrities and the politics required to win awards, among several others.

Quite a few famous sites and celebrities are highlighted in the background or they may get the spotlight for an episode or two. However, throughout the whole season several recurring locations, jokes and characters are found scattered about.

Along with the rapid fire delivery of jokes is the depiction of several mental and cultural issues, like depression, the struggle of being asexual, emotional baggage from childhood, not feeling like you belong in your own home country and the many ways these characters block or numb their pain. Mainly through drugs and alcohol.

The show occasionally offers its take on current events, with previous seasons tackling gun control, abortion and the MeToo movement.

Several critics and fans alike have stated that “Bojack Horseman” has one of the most realistic portrayals of depression and what people that deal with it go through on a daily basis. Some say it does a much better job at portraying mental health issues than “13 Reasons Why,” another Netflix original.

On Wednesday Sept. 26, the show will begin airing on Comedy Central. It is the first Netflix original series to be syndicated on U.S. TV.

“Bojack Horseman” has been nominated for and won several awards through its run, including honors at the Annie Awards, Writers Guild of America Awards and the Gold Derby Awards.

The first reviews of season 5 are on par with the rest of the series following season 1. Each subsequent season holds a 97 percent or higher on Rotten Tomatoes and an 87 out of 100 or higher on Metacritic.

Due to its unique art style, talented vocal cast and the critically acclaimed writing of the characters, “Bojack Horseman” will continue to be one of the biggest Netflix original series.

MEKAKUCITY RELOAD

Erika Brandenburg
Arts and Entertainment Editor

After over half a decade of no new music, Jin (also known as Shizen no Teki-P) is publishing a new album for his series Kagerou Project. The title of the album is called “Mekakucity Reload” and it was announced on Aug. 15 of this year, the most prominent date regarding the series. So far, it has three tracks released with the full album coming out on Nov. 7.

The songs that currently have a full video and official rendition are “Never Lost Word” and “Additional Memory.” The third song, “Remind Blue,” only has an acoustic live performance from the creator himself.

As the main storyline of the series has been completed already, this album appears to focus on filling in the gaps that may exist throughout. For example, “Never Lost Words” is a song that has one of the characters that never got the spotlight before at the center of it.

Kagerou Project itself is a multimedia project dating back to Feb. 17, 2011 with Jin releasing his first song for the series called “Jinzou Enemy (Artificial Enemy).” Months later brought on the song Mekakushi Code (Blindfold Code), introducing the other main characters within the series.

However, the series didn’t gain a proper following until after the release of its third song, “Kagerou Daze (Heat Haze Daze).” Not only did it give the series its title, but it is also by far the most popular and well known song in the series (aside from one that came out much later called Outer Science). It features two characters caught inside of a time loop on Aug. 15, a date that is extremely relevant to the series overall.

After this song’s release, the series’ popularity rose significantly. From there, Kagerou Project expanded into several other mediums. This includes: an anime, a manga series, and light novels.

Each piece of the series follows a different timeline, all with major differences from the other parts of the series. It pulls together the overarching plot of the main characters being caught in a time loop until they find the true ending to put a stop to the loop they’ve become ensnared in. As of right now, only the anime and song series have a solid conclusion to them while the other two mediums are ongoing.

Even with the major branches, the basic plot of Kagerou Project is the same: a group of kids on Aug. 14 and 15 come together as a result of them all having special powers revolving around the eyes. The day tends to change in events depending on the scenario, though a majority of timelines end up the same: with a several members of the cast being killed off and the time loop resetting once more.

It’s a tragic series, though one that’s colorful and immersive in the many ways people can enjoy it. Aug. 15 continues to be a date that stands out among old and new fans alike and brings the fans together to rediscover and talk about a series still tugging along faithfully.

Dwyn's Den: It's Pumpkin Spice Season

fall weather almost never actually comes till well into October, but, I can always count on pumpkin spice season coming right around mid to late September.

As stereotypical

as it might sound, as soon as Starbucks releases their pumpkin spice latte, it's on. The fall sweaters, comfy socks and autumn scented candles come out for the season and I immediately begin wearing baggy sweaters and leggings (I don't care if Ohio still thinks it's summer, it's cold at school anyway).

I love this time of year because there is so much to do, and the humidity begins to drop, so going outside and not sweating your eyebrows off is finally possible.

Haunted houses start opening up, corn mazes, and the King's Island Haunt at the end of next month.

There is also tons of other fall things to do, like apple picking and bonfires, hayrides, s'mores and of course apple cider.

Windmill farm do hayrides this time of year that take you through a pumpkin patch and allow you to pick out your own pumpkin to take home. It's a great family place, but also still fun once your older.

There are several apple orchards in the area where you can go and pick bags full of apples and drink cider made from the farm's apples.

Plus all the great holidays!

Halloween is right around the corner and as soon as October hits it's like everything turns into ghost and goblins and stores dedicate whole shelves to giant bags of assorted candy.

Not to mention the best part of September, pumpkin spice everywhere. I must admit that a few years back I wouldn't go anywhere near something pumpkin spice flavored, but there is a reason it's a fall cliché, it's pretty good.

Spiced pumpkin breads and pies, pumpkin spice lattes and flavored coffees, pumpkin spice ice cream and scones, the list goes on. And it all tastes like happy little bites and/or sips of fall wonder. Plus it's a reminder of what's to come.

Overall this time of year just feels cozy to me. Pumpkin spice season is more than the selfies of you and your squad with you Starbucks lattes, to me it's the fun memories behind going and getting that latte.

The weather has started to cool down, so going with your friends and getting a warm drink and wrapping up in comfy scarves is a fun thing to do. Along with apple picking and hayrides and pumpkin patches and any other tradition you may have, it's all about embracing the fall spirit in your own way.

Cerridwyn Kuykendall
Managing Editor

It's finally approaching that time of year again. The leaves will soon turn bright fall colors, the Halloween candy has hit the shelves, comfy sweaters have been adding back into wardrobes and everything smells, tastes and is themed like pumpkins and cinnamon sticks.

Pumpkin spice season is my favorite time of year. In Ohio, the

Here's Henry: Music You Can School With

Henry Wolski
Executive Editor

So at this point we're in the sixth week of the semester and midterms are coming up. I can feel the dread radiating off of the paper or computer you're reading from right now.

If you're feeling like me, then this semester has kicked you right in the hind quarters.

Juggling your various responsibilities such as a job (or jobs), a child (or several children), keeping a social life and trying to take care of your body in addition to your class load, probably feels like adding to a house of cards that is at a 45 degree angle.

But you probably think I'm gonna offer some solutions to your problem in the form of resources available on campus or techniques you can use to relieve your stress.

Wrong. It's been done time and time before and I don't have the answers for you, as my house of cards is already lying on the ground and it's on fire.

What I can give you is some lit music to use when you're trying to study or write that big ol' paper. Using music to help me work (at a moderate volume) has always helped me stay focus and keep me invested in my studies. I know plenty of others who get the same effect from it as well. So without further ado, I give you my list of the best music to do your schoolwork to.

A few disclaimers: Not everyone likes listening to music while they do their homework. Also, there are no studies that have influenced my choices here, it's just what's worked for me. It might help to do some listening right before or during your study sesh, it's up to you. Satisfaction is not guaranteed here.

Classical Music: It's the oldest one in the book, you've all heard of the "Mozart Effect," the idea that classical music makes you smarter, or even playing it to your unborn child will help it. That's just a media manufactured hoax.

However, the right classical music helps me get in the zone when I'm writing about the revolutionary war or most history topics. They have such a good level of ebb and flow to them that keep things interesting, but not overbearing.

Some recommended songs are "Tragic Overture" by Brahms, "Slavonic March" by Tchaikovsky, any selection of Saint Saens "Carnival of the Animals" and "Consolation No. 3" by Liszt. The options are endless, however.

Pink Floyd: I recommend these guys for similar reasons to the classical music. Floyd is just a bit more modern. David Gilmour is a master of the guitar and creating emotional and soulful rhythms and melodies that stimulate the listener's brain.

Add in the input of his talented Floyd bandmates like Richard Wright and Roger Waters and you have some great stuff to drift away to in the land of endless

Baker's Beat: Playing the Game

Justin A. Baker
Staff Writer

What do you do when you know you have done nothing wrong but the environment you're currently in demands you to do an action contradictory to your nature?

What do you do when you are forced to be reprimanded or chastised for something completely out of your control? Do you take your lumps and carry on, or do you say something, anything to someone in hopes that they can help the situation?

That is the question I'm asking dear readers. As I get older and further in my chosen career field I become more aware of the "the game."

What is the game? Well the game is a mixture of actions, perception and true administration/hierarchy judgment lunacy. You start out with a certain number of points. The points are at a different value for everyone, depending on certain criteria.

If you are a straight male you have the greatest number of points in the game. A minority male has half the points of the straight male. Females have one third fewer points than both males. Minority females have the least points of all. And then finally if you're homosexual or transgender, male or female, you find that you're right above the female minority.

The whole object of the game is not to get dinged and have points removed.

All points and dings are kept in the imaginary ledger of your superiors and if you run out of points you are asked to leave your current environment or situation. So how do you lose points?

You take the action of a person who has worked in a certain career field or position and you judge them harshly on everything and anything. What they wear, how they speak to people and what they do when they think no one's looking.

Then you put that through the perception field. Is what they're doing at work and off work representing the company, organization or business in the best possible way?

Finally we factor in the administration judgment lunacy equation. If ever one of your underlings or workers show their supposed superior is wrong or the underling corrects them then they are dinged.

Now with all that being said how do you win the game? In all honesty, you don't! You work hard and do everything right. You keep your head down, please the right people and always try to conduct yourself in a professional manner.

In the end, it all just comes down to luck. You're never going to truly be the point winner when others start so far ahead of you. You can always be dinged and thrown out of the game at a moments notice because of something that was out of your control!

So why play the game? You play the game because there is always that chance even if it is a one in a million chance to win.

To win means that you have a chance to rewrite the rules of the game. A chance to make everyone be able to start off on even footing. The chance to make your situation the best it's ever been for your family and loved ones.

It's a chance to right wrongs and have a sense of pride and contentment in yourself that others can't or won't even attempt to dream of.

Finally, it's a chance to tear down the game altogether and start everything anew on a fresh level for everyone. So I leave you with this question, now that you know everything there is to know about the game: Would you still play it?

A few good ones are "Shine on You Crazy Diamond Parts 1-10," "Marooned," "Echoes" and the entirety of "The Endless River."

Tempest 2000: The soundtrack of one of the most memorable games in the Atari Jaguar's console life is an engaging mix of rock, techno, reggae and funk. It is perfect for the student that needs some more uptempo stuff to satisfy their appetite for scholastic success. Check it out if you've never heard of it.

Run the Jewels: Another worthy addition to the listening library is rap duo Run the Jewels. Killer Mike and El-P bring a manic, high energy feel with their rhymes and beats that can give you the extra kick you need when you need motivation.

However, not everyone can deal with fast paced music. I can sometimes, and especially when I do math work. These guys are good enough to make me bob my head when I crunch the numbers.

A few highlights include "Close Your Eyes (and Count to...)" "Mean Demeanor," "Thursday in the Danger Room" and "Crown."

Youtube Trap Mixes: There are several channels on YouTube dedicated to turning classic songs from various forms of media into lo-fi trap remixes. Your mileage may vary on these, but once you find the right channel/playlist, these can be cathartic to listen to.

The instrumentation isn't overbearing and there aren't any lyrics that could distract you. It always calms me down at least. Two of my favorites are "Super Mario World Game Over Theme," and "Pure Imagination." Childish Gambino's "Awaken My Love:" This album is already awesome, but the mellow, atmospheric tunes like "Redbone," "Stand Tall" and "Me and Your Mama" create a warm environment for work.

This album seems to have more focus on the instrumentation and the mood, which helps it out as a study album.

I could go on for a while, but this is the music I turn to the most when I need to cram some info the night before a test (PSA: don't do that).

So just remember, even when your house of cards is going down in flames, you can at least play so badass music to accompany you.

Sinclair Cares Counseling Services

Counseling Services now offers two groups for students on campus-Road 2 Recovery, and a Grief group. Road 2 Recovery is a group for any student in recovery or struggling with alcohol, drugs, etc. Brenda Smith and John Potter, both from Accessibility and Counseling Services, lead the group. Road 2 Recovery meets every Thursday at 12 PM in 6-142. The Grief group is led by Larry Lindstrom from Campus Ministry, and Emily Hudson from Counseling Services.

This group helps students rebuild their life after a loss or crisis. A loss can be loss of a person, relationship, job, etc. The Grief group meets every Tuesday from 12PM-1PM in 7-003 in the Tartan Marketplace, where the old faculty lunchroom used to be.

If you are experiencing any challenges with recovery or loss, consider attending one of the groups. They are casual, confidential, and informal. And remember, if at any time you feel it would be helpful to talk to someone, call us at 512-3032 or stop by our office at 4-331.

Ombuddy Corner

As quizzes/tests become more frequent, and with midterms approaching, the Ombuddy wants to share some helpful study tips:

1. Cut the mentality that the library is the only place to study. Studies show that switching up the place you study can actually be helpful, as memory is colored by location.
2. Look for practice quizzes online or at the end of your textbook. Optional work is often disregarded but can be one of the best ways to prep.
3. Try to break study time into chunks over a few days and use the day before as a review, rather than a cram session, to eliminate unnecessary stress.
4. Remember WHY you are doing this. Looking at your long-term goals can be a great motivator to study hard.

The ombuddy and the rest of the staff here at Sinclair are rooting for you! Good luck and happy studying!

My Voice: Kindness Will Change the World

Kelsey Fitzpatrick
Staff Writer

Have you ever had a day that just felt like it would never end? A day that was full of awfulness and was frankly a downer? Me too.

I wonder though, have you ever, on one of those days had one person do, say or act with some level of kindness or gentleness, and instantly your mood improves? Me too.

Kindness is personally my favorite word, one I think should be our first response in every situation, even though I know it can be hard. When that rude person cuts you in line at Walmart, or that lady walking way too fast through a big crowd who bumps into everyone because she is in "such a hurry." Maybe it's the guy who cut you off on your drive to work today.

All of those people have struggles like you and I. We all are fighting these internal battles, whether it be finances, mental illness, physical illness, etc. We never know what someone is going through, and while it doesn't excuse their behavior, it doesn't mean it justifies our desire to "get even."

I am asking you, think of a time when you were really struggling. Maybe you were afraid you couldn't pay a bill, or a loved one was very ill? Did you maybe carry yourself rudely? Did you talk to that nice lady behind the counter at CVS a little too rudely when your coupon wouldn't go through? It's okay if you have, I've been there too.

So I am asking you to try something out. When you are having one of those long days, do something kind. Maybe compliment the woman in front of you at the checkout lane on her shoes, or pay for someone's meal, do something small.

I'm promising you, if you just spend an extra moment looking, you will find so many opportunities to share kindness on an everyday basis.

Some people get caught up in the concept that to do a kind act you have to put forth "oh so much money." It isn't true though! Often those opportunities cost very little or even nothing. It doesn't have to be something big or extravagant. It can be something small, seemingly pointless, that can change a person's life forever.

Smile today, know you are worth so much more than a bad day!

Carry yourself with an attitude of positivity and you will make people around you happier. If you have kids, show them an example of love and generosity. Teach and preach kindness in all that you do.

It will change the world someday, I know it! Today, I want to use my voice to reproduce positivity. It starts with us. It starts with you.

Where did you come from?
 Where did you go?
 Why is it open,
 That window

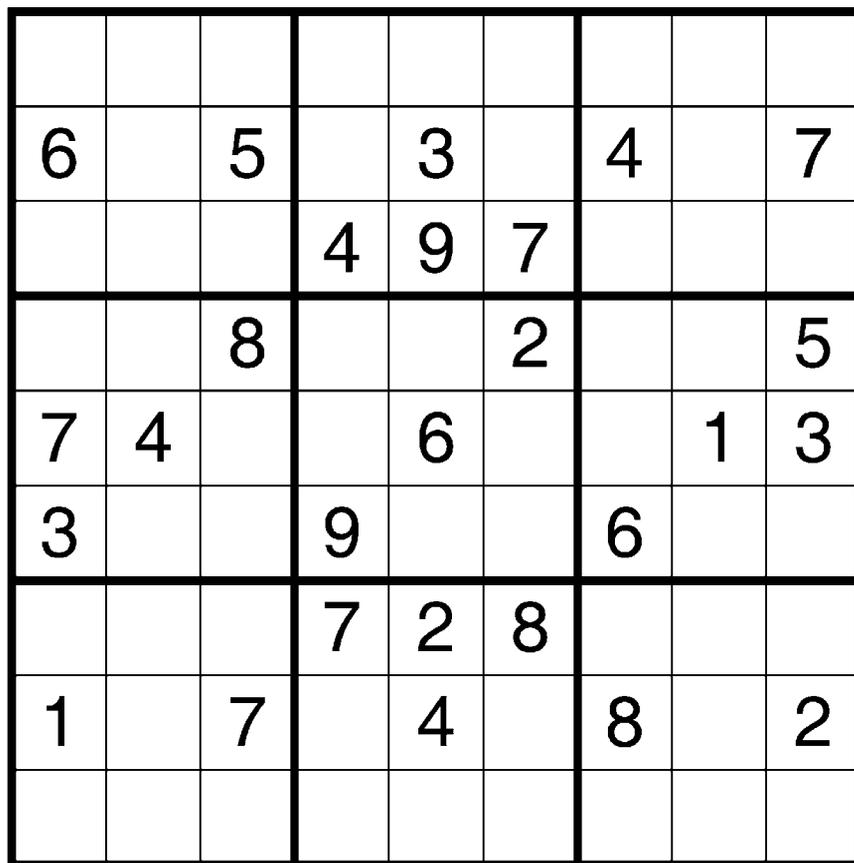

A fresh breeze fills my air
 Essence of the past
 Whispering in my ear.
 Upon my glance outside

Man kissing woman,
 perhaps goodbye
 Where did she come from?
 Where will she go?

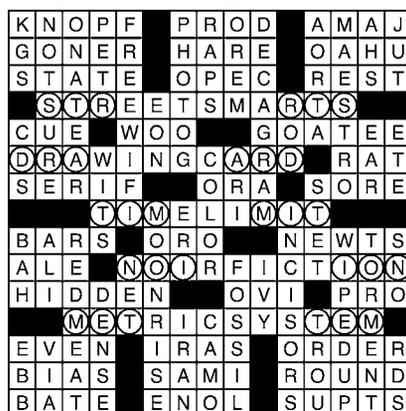

Back in time
 His hand in mine
 Batting eyes,
 Butterflies.

Where did she come from?
 Where did she go?
 Shut the window,
