Zombie Land Saga

An anime original series, “Zombie Land Saga” started on Oct. 4, 2018 and is planned for a 12 episode run. The manga dropped four days after the first episode, taking the stage on Oct. 8, 2018 in the magazine ‘Cycomi.’ The anime is produced by Cygames in a collaboration with Avex Pictures with the show being animated by studio MAPPA.

The show was directed by Munehisa Sakai, written by Shigeru Murakoshi and the music was created by Yasuharu Takanashi, a prolific composer and arranger for a number of anime. He has done work for several iterations of the “Pretty Cure!” franchise as well as “Naruto Shippuden,” which encompasses the movies and even “Boruto.”

Funimation and Crunchyroll both have licenses for the series and stream it on their websites upon new releases.

“Zombie Land Saga” starts out with Sakura Minamoto circa 2003 as she leaves for school with a manila envelope. Unfortunately, her day is ruthlessly cut short as, once she steps outside of her house, she is run over by a truck and promptly killed.

Ten years pass before she is brought back as a zombie along with six other girls that are considered “legendary” in terms of show business from different eras in Japan’s history. The person that brings the girls back to life is a man named Kotaro Tatsumi, where he only has one goal in mind: to form an all-zombie idol group in order to save the Saga prefecture.

However, at the start, Sakura is the only zombie that has regained her sentience; the others do not become properly conscious until after the group’s first performance.

As the seven girls come together, they go through a few names for their group (such as Death Musume and Green Face courtesy of Tatsumi) before ultimately coming up with Franchouchou, taken from another member’s odd sneezing sound.

Each girl is given a number as opposed to using their name since, in some cases, those that knew the girls when they were alive may still be around and it would raise suspicion. They are numbered zero through six and announce themselves as such prior to their performances.

Member Zero is Tae Yamada, the reason behind the group’s name as well as the only girl in the group that has yet to regain her human consciousness. She exhibits typical zombie behavior such as biting (though it doesn’t turn a person into a zombie), having detachable body parts, and being unable to speak. She’s kept from attacking others by Tatsumi, who carries around dried squid to keep her placated.

Member One is the show’s protagonist, Sakura. Her circumstances are a bit odd in comparison to the other zombies; she is the only one that was never a professional idol (having planned to audition for the group Iron Frill when she died) as well as the only one to be revived with no memories.

Member Two is Saki Nikaido, the delinquent leader of a biker gang (and now Franchouchou) who conquered Kyushu during the 1990s.

Member Three is Ai Mizuno. She was formerly the lead vocalist of Iron Frill before she died.

Member Four is Junko Konno, an idol from the Shōwa era who was popular during the 1980s. As social media didn’t exist then, modern idol culture comes as a shock to her.

Member Five is Yugiri, a courtesan from between the Bakumatsu and Meiji Restoration eras in the 19th century. She is the eldest of the girls as she was 19 when she passed.

Finally, Member Six is Lily Hoshikawa. The youngest of the bunch at age 12, she was a child star prior to her abrupt death.

“Zombie Land Saga,” which charted as a horror show for the zombie aspect, is absolutely a comedy. The characters interactions are fun and bright along with how the concept itself is a parody of idol culture as a whole.

It’s an anime that has been outstanding in terms of music and animation, making it an enjoyable watch for all audiences.

Bird Box: Blind Faith?

On Dec. 28, 2018, Netflix released the highly anticipated movie “Bird Box” to its streaming platform. The movie, which has a rather high billed cast for a Netflix movie, stars Sandra Bullock, Sarah Paulson, Machine Gun Kelly and Trevante Rhodes (of “Moonlight” fame) among its cast.

The protagonist, Malorie, played by Bullock, finds herself in the middle of an apocalyptic situation while she’s six months pregnant with her first child.

This apocalypse begins internationally with a rash of sudden suicides. Her sister, Jessica, played by Paulson, is worried but Malorie doesn’t seem to share the same sentiment as it’s not even in the states yet.

However, as Malorie leaves her doctor’s appointment, she sees a woman smashing her head into the glass window in an attempt to kill herself. As Jessica and Malorie speed away from the women, chaos breaks loose.

Cars careen off the road as whatever is affecting people begins to take hold. Jessica herself sees the creature that is affecting everyone and crashes the car, taking her own life.

Malorie luckily survives and makes it to a stranger’s house after the elderly man’s, who we see through a window, wife runs out only to fall victim to the creatures. Inside the house, we’re introduced to the characters that round out the main cast.

With everyone safely inside, the characters begin to devise a plan. At first, they’re lead by Greg, played by BD Wong. He devises a plan when it’s clear they’re going to need more food. However, it fails and he ends up dying.

The loose cannon here is the elderly man, Douglas, played by John Malkovich. He disagrees with most choices, refuses to let in other survivors, which we later learn may have been a smart choice, and usually walks around slightly drunk with a gun in his hand.

Tom, played by Trevante Rhodes, is the peacemaker of the group. He tries to keep everyone from falling apart and killing each other as well as devises a plan to get food.

The group, consisting of Malorie, Charlie, Lucy, Douglas and Tom black out the windows of the car and attempt to drive to the supermarket where Charlie worked using strictly GPS and sheer luck.

Eventually, through a series of horrific deaths, we’re left with just Malorie, her son and Olympia, one of the other survivors and her daughter. The three make their way to a known safehouse by crossing a dangerous river.

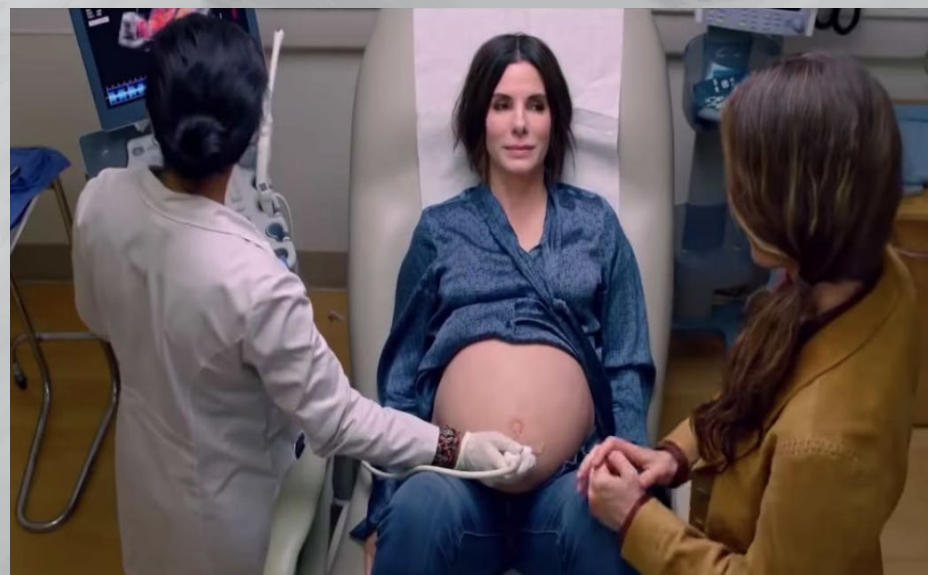

unaffected as they can’t see and therefore are immune to its powers. The question remains then, why are birds so sensitive? What is it about the creature that makes birds the best warning signal for humans?

In the video on Greg’s computer, before the creatures manifest, butterflies seem to appear. Perhaps this is a metaphor for ‘beauty before the ugly’ or something like that.

It’s said throughout the movie that the creatures play on your worst fear, but one person calls out to their mother, so perhaps it also shows you your dead loved ones and uses them to draw you in.

There are conspiracy theories abound with this movie, that’s for sure. “Bird Box” is a perfect stand alone movie, but I see the threads for a sequel to be possible.

The ending alone, with Malorie and the kids in the school for

Youtube

Malorie brings along her box of birds, which help detect when the creatures are near.

The creatures in the movie are never really explained. All we know is that mentally ill and blind people aren’t affected like the rest of the world. Those who are mentally ill and look at the creature are affected but seem to become worshipers of the creature, trying to turn others or make them look at it as well.

Blind people are entirely the blind safehouse, gives us an option for a ‘years later’ sort of deal where the creature has been identified, blind people rule the world and there’s a fight to take back society.

New Studies Concerning Undocumented Immigrants

Richard Foltz
Reporter

Recent studies regarding undocumented immigrants have had varying estimates but seem to tell somewhat similar narratives in terms of trends in migration into the United States.

A Pew Center study released Nov. 30, 2018 estimates the number of undocumented immigrants at 10.7 million, a sharp decrease from the 12.2 million documented over ten years ago.

In September a similar study conducted by Mohammad M. Fazel-Zarandi, Yale and MIT professor, estimated the number to be 22.1 million.

According to Zarandi's report, the estimates could be as low as 16.2 million or as high as 29.1 million. A number that is below President Trump's estimate of nearly 34 million, a fact that he claimed multiple times throughout his bid for presidency and term as president.

A similar study provided annually and conducted by the ACS (The American Community Survey) in which 3.5 million people were interviewed, annually puts the number at 11 million, a statistic that would lean towards the Pew Study's estimate. Fazel-Zarandi said of his report in The Hill, "The trajectory is the same. We see the same patterns happening, but they're just understating the actual number of people who have made it here."

Jonathan Feinstein, co-author of the Yale report told Yale Insights, "We wouldn't want people to walk away from this research thinking that suddenly there's a large influx happening now. It's really something that happened in the past and maybe was not properly counted or documented."

In other words, though many of the reports carry different estimates on the number of undocumented immigrants within the United States, they all seem to suggest that there is no major recent influx, but instead that these are genuinely hard things to get accurate readings on.

The Yale study points to another narrative on the criminality among undocumented immigrants. "You have the same number of crimes but now spread over twice as many people as was believed before," Edward Kaplan, another co-author of the report, as taken from the aforementioned article in The Hill, stated.

He continued: "Which right away means that the crime rate among undocumented immigrants is essentially half whatever was previously believed." The Yale study found similar narratives to that of the ACS's study throughout the '90s and early '00s as well, finding a similar upward trajectory in the '90s and a leveling out in the late '00s.

Further doubt has been given to the Yale Institute's finding, as Robert Warren, a demographer at the Center for Migration Studies, a New York based think tank, brought into question the migratory nature of Mexican workers who enter the country to work for a season and then leave, to return for a future season.

"The policy implications are so important that he should have done that," says Warren, as taken from a Washington Times article on the studies.

Steven A. Camarota, a demographer at the D.C. based Center for Immigration Studies added in the same Washington Times article, "When they came up with this number they should have stepped back and said we've got a problem, it doesn't pass the kind of prima facie approach of what seems possible."

Dwyn's Den: The Violant History of Caffeine

Cerridwyn Kuykendall
Managing Editor

Ah caffeine, the fuel for many exams and late night study binges. But this miracle substance is more than meets the eye.

Caffeine is a chemical that naturally occurs in many plants, including coffee beans and certain plants often used for teas. It can also be found in kola nuts, which are used to make certain soft drinks and in cacao pods that are used to make some chocolates.

Synthetic caffeine can also be found in many pain medications, and over the counter drugs meant to boost alertness.

Caffeine has some very interesting legends and history surrounding it.

In Chinese mythology, there is a story that dates back to 2737 B.C.E (Before Common Era) that says emperor Shen Nung first discovered tea when he was sitting under a tree drinking a cup of hot water. As the legend goes, a leaf from the tree fell into the emperor's cup and created the first tea.

Many Arabian legends and tales that date back to as early as 900 B.C.E, also reference a bitter beverage that "had the power to ward off sleep." And of course, the tale of the Ethiopian goat herder, which is attributed as the first discovery of coffee.

As the story goes, one night the goat herder, Kaldi, notices his goats have not returned from grazing. In the morning Kaldi finally finds them, quite energetically dancing around a cluster of shrubs that have red berries growing on them. He notices a few of the goats eating the berries, and decides to try one himself.

The berry gives Kaldi a great boost of energy and begins dancing around the shrub with his goats. Kaldi later speaks with monks who make a bitter drink from the berries.

A few hundred years later, in 1100 C.E (Common Era) people began cultivating coffee trees on the Arabian Peninsula, and boiled the berries to make a drink they called Qahwa. From there the caffeinating qualities of coffee spread like wildfire.

First through Yemen in the mid 1400's, the drink was originally used for medical or even religious purposes. People often drank it to stay alert during long nights of praying and devotional practices.

Soon after, in 1475, the first coffee shop opened in Constantinople, and according to one legend, a Turkish law was passed that a women could leave her husband if he didn't provide a sufficient amount of coffee.

The use of coffee began to spread to Mecca and Medina as the 1500's drew closer, and people began drinking coffee more for pleasure. One article states this may have partially been because wine became outlawed in the Quran around this time.

Coffee became a luxury drink around this time, however, many holy men begin to attack the drink saying it should also be illegal in the Quran, as it is a stimulant like wine.

Because of this, in 1511 the governor of Mecca tried to ban coffee because he feared the influence of the drink might foster an uprising against his rule. This resulted in all the coffee shops and houses in Constantinople being shut down, and the beginning of a "reign of terror" on coffee.

However, this ban did not last long. Within a week the Sultan received word of the governor's actions and promptly declared coffee sacred and had the governor executed for his actions.

Coffee first spread to central Europe in the mid 1500's, when the Turkish army left behind bags of coffee as they fled Vienna. Franz George Kolschitzky, the leader of the army that defeated the Turkish, claimed the coffee in the victory and the first coffee house in central Europe was soon established.

This new discovery quickly spread throughout the Ottoman Empire and led to a lot of controversies. Sultan Sulieman the Great banned coffee in the Ottoman Empire soon after its arrival, however, the number of coffee houses in Constantinople started to rise.

Shortly after, in the early 1600's, Pope Clemente VIII was asked by religious followers to ban coffee within the church; his response to this was quite relatable and humorous: "This beverage is so delicious it would be a sin to let only misbelievers drink it." He then ordered a baptism of sorts on coffee to put the issue to rest.

Shortly after coffee was brought to the new world, although Canadian historians argue it arrived there first. At the same time, coffee began to spread through Europe, with coffee houses opening in Italy, Paris and Britain.

From this point, many countries, such as the Dutch, started smuggling coffee all over Europe. Many countries placed temporary bans and regulations on coffee, which were usually reversed after a short time due to public protest.

Soon, coffee became the new favorite breakfast drink in New York City, replacing beer. And the Dutch became the first to transport and trade coffee commercially. Soon after, the coffee tree was brought to the Americas for cultivation, and the industry began to boom. By the late 1800s the New York Coffee Exchange officially opened, and within a few decades, the variety in coffee drinks had exploded.

By 1995, coffee had become the world's most popular beverage, with billions of cups being consumed each year.

Many of these cups will be consumed by desperate college students, hoping the alert quality of caffeine will save them from the sleep deprivation that studying can cause.

One such college student drank a large helping of Starbucks while writing over 900 words about the history of coffee, in hopes that the caffeine gods will take this article as a tribute, and bless us all with the energy to survive spring semester.

Good luck this semester everyone, may the odds be ever in your favor!

Sinclair Cares Counseling Services

New students and returning students; welcome to 2019 and the start of a new semester! Counseling Services wanted to remind students about our services, as well as where we are located during the construction.

For any registered student, Counseling Services offers free and confidential counseling by licensed counselors. The two main areas we work with students on are academic challenges and personal/emotional challenges.

Academic challenges could be concerns with studying, time management, procrastination and test anxiety.

Personal/emotional challenges could be related to stress, relationships, depression and anxiety.

We work with students to identify action steps they can take, and do follow up appointments as the student feels are helpful. If needed, counselors can refer students in the community for more intensive services (medication, psychological assessment, intensive therapy, etc).

Case management is another service offered in Counseling Services. For any student needing help with basic needs, such as food, housing, rent, bills, transportation, etc., they can meet with our Case Manager, who will connect them with both community and campus resources to help them with the present concerns.

Stay tuned for upcoming information about future events and tips for success! Counseling Services is located in 4-331, and students can call to set up appointments at 937-512-3032.

Have a great start to the semester!

Jeri's Jackpot: Video Games, Impatience and Rage

Jeri Hensley
Graphic Designer

If there's anything I've learned from my rapid entrance to the so-called 'gaming culture,' it's that there's a certain level of impatience that is like no other within this community.

Take, for instance, "Fallout 76" and the "Fallout" franchise community in general. In the months leading up to the game, from the initial trailer release at E3 to the first gameplay trailers, there was an overwhelming wave of hype or excitement.

However, when the game was released in early November it was clear that this was a different community altogether. If one thing glitched or broke or acted strange, the community was in an uproar, demanding it be fixed right this second or there would be blood! By blood, I mean an influx of refund requests.

Continuing in the spirit of the impatience and 'rage-quitting,' when DLC, or downloadable content is announced, people demand it be in the game now, for free and work perfectly.

On that note, when things don't work as expected and it appears to take developers a few days to fix it, players decide enough is enough and quit the game out of pure anger, hence known as a form of 'rage-quitting.'

The question is, why are we like this? Why as a culture have we become so impatient and so demanding? If you take a look at the society that most of us live in, it's easy to see. We can get pretty much anything we want at the snap of our fingers.

TV can be put on instant replay, we can summon items from a website within the span of two days, and now we can even have someone bring us our groceries. We live in a world where 'instant' is the new normal, and when we have to wait for something that we feel should be a basic fix to a problem, it can be frustrating.

That being said, it's still no reason to act as if a company of hardworking people belong to us and should dedicate all their time to fixing problems we find.

There are always going to be issues with online games unless we one day perfect it, so I vote we all stop, take a breath and maybe go play something else if it's really bothering you that badly.
